Preventive Services Task Force (USPSTF) that addresses the effectiveness and adverse effects of behavioral interventions and counseling to prevent child abuse and neglect for children at potentially increased risk. This review focuses on children without obvious signs or symptoms of abuse or neglect who are seen in health care settings. A separate review examines screening women for intimate partner violence and screening for elder abuse. In 2004, based on results of a previous review of screening for abuse and neglect, the USPSTF found insufficient evidence to recommend for or against routine screening of parents or guardians for the physical abuse or neglect of children (I statement). The USPSTF could not determine the balance between the benefits and harms of screening because of the lack of critical evidence. Limitations included the following: Interventions were predominantly home visitation programs that utilized varied and often inadequately described components during the prenatal, postpartum, and early childhood periods. It is unknown whether these models would work in other populations or with older children: There were no...
