I expostulated with warmth upon this treatment, told them that I was a man upon whom the law had as yet passed no censure, and who therefore in the eye of the law was innocent. But they bid me keep such fudge for people who knew no better; that they knew what they did, and would answer it to any court in England. The pain of the fetter was intolerable. I endeavoured in various ways to relieve it, and even privily to free my leg; but the more it was swelled, the more was this rendered impossible. I then resolved to bear it with patience: still the longer it continued, the worse it grew. After two days and two nights I intended to go and ask the surgeon who usually attended the prison to look at it, for, if it continued longer as it was, I was convinced it would mortify. But he glared surlily at me, and said, Damn my blood! I (would like to see that day. To die of a mortification is too good an end for such a rascal! At the time that he thus addressed me, the whole mass of my blood was already fevered by the anguish I had undergone, my patience was wholly exhausted, and I was silly enough to be irritated beyond bearing by his impertinence and vulgarity. Look you, Mr. turnkey, said I, there...
